Men of Affairs Are Hopeful and Give Reason

Things Are Looking Up—Bankers, Manufacturers and Wall Street Men Predict a Genuine and Continuous Improvement in Trade.

EN of Affairs in New York are decidedly more hopeful of better times than have been for many months, and this is clearly indicated by the tone of the conversation. That is to be heard in the places where they most do congregate. Nearly everyone seems to believe that the present apparent improvement is genuine, that it will increase steadily, though perhaps slowly, all through the summer, and that next autumn will present a very satisfactory condition of affairs. There are those, however, who do not share in this optimism, but no one with whom the present writer has recently talked has failed to speak in a tone of general encouragement, and from this it seems apparent that the number who do not look for continued improvement is relatively small.

Very hopeful indeed is Hon. Warner Miller, whose interests in the raw materials of paper making are most important. Mr. Miller's talk upon the situation yesterday seemed very interesting to me. Said he: "There is no doubt about it. There is a real and widespread improvement in general business. I base this assertion upon the advance which has been noticed in the paper business. Possibly you have never thought of it in that light, but the paper trade is, perhaps, the most sensitive business barometer in existence. No transaction whatever will be consummated without the consumption of paper. When business is good there is demand for enormous quantities of bill heads, checks and drafts, receipts, bills of lading, letter paper, telegraph blanks, paper for the parcels in which goods sold at retail are packed, and so on. Advertising is always best when there is plenty of business, and that means, not only more pages in the newspapers, but the printing of hundreds of hand bills and many other kinds of advertising paper. The circulation of newspapers is also much better in good times than in bad times, and whenever general business is good then the consumption of paper in all lines is great. When general business begins to fall off paper sales must decrease in direct ratio. At the present time we find a greater demand for all sorts of paper than we have enjoyed for a year or two, and the manufacturers and dealers are enabled because of that to demand and obtain better prices."

What Wall Street Thinks. Mr. William Sherer, manager of the New York clearing house, observes daily a business barometer, even more sensitive and probably as accurate as that which comes under the observation of Senator Miller. Mr. Sherer is hopeful. In discussing the situation the other day, he said:

"There is no great rush, but business is undoubtedly looking up. Money brings better rates and is in much better demand than it was a year ago, and although the banks have not so large a surplus as they had then, we are well satisfied, under the circumstances, to know that the money is being used in business, instead of being hoarded. It seems probable to me that the present upward tendency will increase gradually and steadily all summer, and I base that expectation principally upon the fact that I no longer see any evidence that the people fear government bankruptcy."

"The New York clearing house exchanges always afford a fairly accurate indication of the business situation, and their value so far this year has been considerably in excess of the volume of transactions during the first quarter of last year. Though the clearing house figures do not furnish an absolutely truthful index, still I think they are very significant. Here they are: January, 1894, $2,165,565; $55,705; February, 1895, $2,394,672; $14,577; February, 1894, $1,731,039; $39,930; February, 1895, $1,804,444; $30,899; March, 1894, $2,088,813; $51,171; March, 1895, $2,210,741; $16,044. You see that there has been a very decided increase. The transactions were not so large as in the first quarter of 1893, to be sure, the figures then running over three billions a month, but still there is plenty of room for encouragement, and from all I can learn a similar state of affairs exists in all parts of the country."

Henry Clews said among other things: "Employers are encouraged by the brighter prospects for a gradual and almost sure return of prosperity to this country. They have in consequence, in numerous instances, begun voluntarily to advance wages, which in itself is substantial evidence of their confidence in the permanency of the improvement which has already taken place, and in each instance where wages have been advanced a corresponding mark up has been made in the stock in trade of those who have taken the initiative in this direction. I believe," Mr. Clews continued, "that there will be more railroad building this year than in any one year for some time; not new lines, perhaps, but many new spurs of old lines will be laid, grades will be lowered, lines straightened, etc. This cannot fail to give employment to labor, as well as an impetus to the profitable production of iron and steel. The advance in price and demand of leather goods of every description has already helped that industry. Cotton and woolen goods are finding an increased demand at advancing prices. Business recovery is very perceptible in all directions, and the return of confidence and courage is certainly most comforting. Bad crops of course would make a serious setback, but now that the wheat and corn belts are having copious rains to relieve the prolonged drought in those sections, prospects for crops are good, and, taking everything into consideration, there is sufficient cause to believe in the return of good times unless there is a serious setback."

What the Railroad Men Say. Mr. H. Walter Webb, of the New York Central railroad, reports a very noticeable increase in local business along the line of rail which he is connected. "There is a greater local activity," he said today, "than there has been during the past eighteen months, and while the aggregate increase is not startlingly large, it means a great deal. This is especially noticeable in the manufacturing towns. Stations that have been using but two or three cars a day are now calling for seven or eight. These things mean a decided increase of business in the autumn unless there is a crop failure, for, with the railroads, general improvement is always preceded by a picking up of local freight business, and this was pronounced all through the month of March. The local passenger business has never suffered as much as has the freight business, though there was some falling off, which has now been followed by improvement in that line also. I cannot say as much of through freight or passenger business, but the improvement in these lines will undoubtedly follow in due time."

Mr. J. D. Laying, general manager of the West Shore railroad, reports a similar state of things in that line. "The improvement in traffic between towns," said Mr. Laying, "means at least that the people are waking up and are getting ready to do business, if not actually doing it, and that is very encouraging. We are not worrying because of the slow revival of through business, since through business means merely export business. We like export business, of course, because it brings foreign money into the country, but what we must have is plenty of business in the country and between its different parts, and it is a revival in this direction that we are hoping for and that we are beginning to observe. It is yet too early to talk much about the crops, but from the boiled out and hard baked plains of Nebraska and Kansas, where the dry heats of a number of summers have fairly cracked the earth, comes the information that the heavy snows of last winter and the copious rains of spring have put the soil in better shape than it has been in years, and that means that the people there will be alive again this year. This I regard as a very important point, though perhaps not so important as the fact that such improvement as we have seen has been gradual and not sudden or spasmodic."

Russell Sage sat in his office on lower Broadway and looked at me thoughtfully when I asked for his opinion of the business outlook. "Well," he said slowly, "I feel encouraged. I do not look for anything very startling to be sure, but I am sure the facts warrant a certain degree of hopefulness. The winter and spring have been of such a character as to promise good crops. Upon this promise business will improve all summer, and unless something untoward happens in the meantime I am sure there will be yet better things in the autumn. In the meantime railroads, merchants and all sorts of business men should be careful not to let the spirit of competition lead them to a reckless cutting of rates and prices. Some of the merchants in New York who stores I have recently visited have been selling their goods at figures much below the mark at which profit is possible. Railroad freight rates in some instances have been cut down to a point at which it is actually impossible to pay operating expenses, let alone interest on obligations and dividends."

Among the Bankers. Ex-Postmaster Gen. Thomas L. James, president of the Lincoln national bank, also spoke in a hopeful strain. "There is more demand for money," said he, when I questioned him, "and, in my judgment, business generally has assumed a healthier tone during the past few weeks. I look for a steady and continued increase in the volume of business," he continued, "though not a rapid one. Rates of interest and discount are a little higher, though not to a burdensome extent, and bills are being paid more promptly, to the great joy and comfort of everybody. An interesting fact is that, as I observe it, business is now better in the south than in the west. Money is not a drug anywhere, and that is, perhaps, the most hopeful sign of all."

At the Chase national bank I saw also Gen. Sam Thomas and Senator Calvin S. Brice. Gen. Thomas has recently returned from an extended trip through the south and west, having visited South Carolina, Georgia, Illinois and Indiana. "During my entire absence," said Gen. Thomas, "I saw many evidences of business improvement and much promise for the future. I believe that the crops will this year be larger than they have been for several seasons. Of course this will make the railroads busy and when they are busy money always circulates. Now as a lack of circulation of money has much to do with all the trouble, I think we are pretty safe in looking for general improvement in that line also. I cannot say as much of through freight or passenger business, but the improvement in these lines will undoubtedly follow in due time."

"These things are unwise and, if continued too long, would lead to still further devaluation of values and stagnation of business, but I believe the present upward tendency will check all this and that prices of goods, rates of freight and wages of working people will all go up in the autumn. It must not be forgotten, however, that this is an era of great competition, and whoever wishes to progress, or even keep ahead, must keep up with the times. He must avail himself of all the latest improvements in his line, he must look after all the economies and he must have the best machinery. During all the depression there has been greater activity in the manufacture of certain sorts of machinery than in many other directions and some people have failed to understand this. It has been due to the fact that many manufacturers with sufficient capital have been introducing new and more extensive plants of machinery than they formerly used in order to conduct their business more economically. Now that the tariff has been cut down and American manufacturers have less advantage than in the past in competing with the manufacturers of Europe, the introduction of more labor-saving machinery will go on and will increase much faster than ever before."

How Horses Are Made to Supply the New Remedy for Diphtheria.

The anti-toxin of diphtheria is a substance derived from the blood of animals, chiefly horses, which have been rendered immune to the action of the diphtheria bacillus, through repeated injections of their toxins. The first steps in its preparation are carried on in the bacteriological laboratory, ending with the final storage of the perfected toxins, and the later one in the stables and laboratories connected with them.

At the death of this unhappy gentleman his head was opened and a portion of his brain found to be the seat of a deep-seated ulcer. In many cases of this kind, we are told by competent authority, the spectral illusions of the dreamer are usually most vivid, and, on awakening, it requires a strong effort of reason to be convinced that the appearances were nothing more than unsubstantial creation or phantoms of a disordered brain. Many instances of a like nature might be quoted to show that where the brain is subject to derangement or the digestive organs deranged, strange hallucinations are liable to make the life of the victim one of torment, and I have often thought, when considering the matter, that insanity is a kind of merciful release—when it is not of a violent nature—from the awful consciousness of such misery.—Boston Herald.

Very Much Occupied.
Witherby—Did you sew the buttons on those shirts I laid out this morning?

Mrs. Witherby—I'm sorry to say I didn't.

"And I don't suppose you've had time to crease those trousers I spoke about."

"No, dear. The truth is—"

"How about those socks of mine that needed darning? Haven't you touched them?"

"No, I—"

"Exactly. And I don't suppose you've given a thought to that hole in the lining of my dresscoat?"

"Oh, yes, I did. But I've been so busy."

"Busy! What on earth have you been doing?"
